

A black and white photograph showing a large crowd of people, mostly men, holding up their bicycles. The bicycles are held high, creating a dense, overlapping pattern of wheels and spokes that fills the entire frame. The people are visible through the gaps between the bikes, some smiling and looking towards the camera. The overall scene suggests a large-scale event, such as a bicycle rally or a protest, where the participants are showcasing their mode of transport.

A high-angle, wide shot of a large crowd of cyclists and runners participating in a mass sporting event on a bridge. The bridge has a blue-painted steel truss structure and a dark asphalt road with white dashed lane markings. The participants are spread across the width of the bridge, moving away from the camera. On the left side of the bridge, there is a body of water and a green park area with trees and a white fence. Tall, white, spherical streetlights line the bridge. The text "crowd accelerated innovation" is overlaid in the center in a large, white, sans-serif font.
